THE SCORE

Being an international spy agency can be hard work—agents in the field risking their lives, staff at home working hard to make a buck, management attempting to keep the balls in the air to make sure everything runs smoothly. A lot can go wrong.

Throw in egotistical super spies using their position to get laid, unhappy accountants selling secrets to the Communists, and a slew of interpersonal relationships and it makes day to day life a powder keg ready to explode. The most dangerous situation for a spy to be in may not always be in enemy territory—it could be the office water cooler.
